GEORGE BARTLETT
CHOSEN TO FILL
UNEXPIRED TERM

George A. Bartlett was appointed by Governor Boyle late yesterday afternoon as judge of the Second judicial district court of Washoe county, to succeed E. F. Lunsford, resigned. Bartlett was Governor Boyle's selection several years ago when Judge R. C. Stoddard resigned to enter the war. He served out the unexpired term and was defeated by Judge Lunsford in the election in November, 1919. Bartlett was the popular choice in Reno. He is a Democrat.

"The appointment was made without taking into consideration the recent controversy over the matter," said Governor Boyle in a statement made to the Gazette yesterday. "Mr. Mooney, who was a candidate for the position, wrote me a letter asking that I disregard the unpleasant incidents which had transpired in connection with the situation, which I did."

"I will say further that only the fact that Mr. Mooney has for several years been intimately associated with me in my office prevented his appointment. He is eminently qualified for the place and it is a matter of serious regret that his association with me was so close that I determined upon the selection of another."

"I have the highest confidence in Judge Bartlett, who has already demonstrated his probity and ability to the people of the state in every position which he has held."

The little Burket boy smiled when the jury was discharged, but apparently did not realize just what it meant. He had maintained all through the trial, which began last Tuesday, that he did not shoot the Slavin boy at Ora, Indiana, last Thanksgiving day, and that a rifle which had been leaning against a post must have been accidentally discharged.

The case is the first in Indiana in which so young a defendant has been tried on a murder charge. Most of the witnesses were children from 7 to 11 years old.
